

Voting in Australia (1956)

NARRATOR: Our democracy rests on a division of power between the National Government and the States that make up the Federation. We take it seriously. Failure to vote at elections carries a fine.

We take seriously, too, our right to say exactly what we think.